The act of reconnaissance stands on and demand a discipline of mature and bold discussions involving the profound phenomena and the everyday rituals constituting the urban life. A discussion about the equilibrium of that urban life with the surrounding natural environment. A discussion about the civilization layers found and scrutinized as to communicate all and each major and minor details. From these multiple tasks we are going to build a rigid common archive of information fully operational on demand. Including the slow walking under the shadows of the trees during an early morning stroll into the valley, the sound of the water and the running of children at the opposite side of the stream, the view of the remaining of a bridge after the last flood, the afternoon feasting into the coolness created by an air current coming down from the high mountains. Our life in-between the powerful landscape we are living and working in and the city we are looking at is already transformed to a field of educational connections and interrelations.

All common and collective cognitive tactics are mixed with the multiple varieties of conventional interpretations, thus, gradually producing and form a new and vivid map. This mutual map of short time investigations, the temporary identity constructed of everything we have already acquire is the bedrock where we are going to build and defend our opinion and proposition. While being into this same time period we are all detect and create a personal map of where and how we are standing and communicating with each other. A personal map of our relation with the close environment. The steep slopes and the hills of the mountain, the dense and thick vegetation of bushes and low trees. The open areas of flowers and high grass. The far away peaks and the deep forest waiting our visit. We are constantly receive and offer details on how our lives change in order to follow this proposal and travel the distance. Create and sustain a network of personal and collective archive and thus transform self to a mature and bold global citizen standing within the multiplicity of experience.
