Invitation to attend the laboratory 'Seed&Feed Canteen'

Open Up UTH continues its actions through another workshop that negotiates the concept of common practices, care and synergy. The workshop Seed & Feed Canteen aims at multicultural dialogue through the practice of food. A process that brings participants together through the exchange of intangible and material goods.

In the spotlight of the workshop discussions is the concept of recipe, which is a collection of practices with the goal of a dish for everyone. The local ingredients, the quantities, the numbered instructions, the method of preparation composes this cultural good, the recipe, which is transferred through time and keeps the memory alive through taste. A dialogue is opened through this process, that extends the concept of the recipe beyond cooking, looking again at the compositions of the things around us.

The "dish for everyone" will be the common place for dialogue, exchange of materials, recipes, as well as multicultural experiences. The workshop will begin with the construction of this common place, the workbench, the place of cutting, testing, and enjoying, a common table for depositing and managing materials and strategies. Afterwards, the workshop invites participants to perform cooking recipes with ingredients available to them and to contribute to a series of discussions with guests on key issues of contemporary concern regarding food such as material management, eating habits, energy footprint. The objectives of these actions are to gain experience and knowledge on matters concerning the world map and of urgent importance.

The Open up Uth Canteen, carrying as luggage the furniture designed and manufactured in the Domestic Assemblage II workshop and the garden products of the Urban Gardening workshop, becomes the meeting point of the ideas of assembly, joint and manual work, cultural exchange and care through the process of eating.
