children that do continue education, they take computer and language private courses (as most Greek children do). These children come from well-off families. This example opens widely the issue of poverty and whether this is the reason of social exclusion. After having talked to the Headmistress of a primary school both with Rom and Greek children, and on the other hand after having done a research on the programs that take place concerning Rom education, we found out that there are two ways of thinking and acting. The first one is all about integrated education which was a helpful tool in the initial attempts, but has reached its limits. So, the problem is traced to the general society issue and more specifically in poverty and the lack of financing for education.

The medicines you need are offered by some kind of a provident society or do you buy them with your own money?

The ones who have insurance they take them free. The others of course cannot.

Are there any people that they don't have any kind of insurance?

No, everybody has insurance, an insurance booklet. This moment I don't feel well. If there were here a doctor now, I would go to him for a check-up to see the level of my blood pressure; to examine everything, you know. But this thing is missing. As an example, this man has sugar in his blood and he does not know which is its level. This man here, is suffering psychologically and is attended by a psychologist. This man is suffering because of various illnesses. He cannot stand upright, his legs are aching. He doesn't know where to go. But if there were a doctor here, or a bus and a truck with doctors, he could do his best to meet them.

The mobile unit proposed by us would visit you, and by the doctors' supervision would do basic check-ups and inform the sick persons to confront the problem.

We need this thing. Yes, we wish these doctors to come. We need them very much.
