

I. VOID_NETWORK_SPACES

Immaterial infoscape.

Over the earth landscape another one floats that is invisible and immaterial. It is composed of informational flow that is exchanged in technological networks. We are constantly moving inside a landscape of data exchange.

By using media we realize its presence. They intermediate and decode for us the information that is transmitted by networks via various signals. In this way we have signal reception and we are able to use our mobile phone, to watch tv, we have access to wireless internet etc. Our actions have to do with a medium that carries information attaching us to a wider system that distributes data and signals.

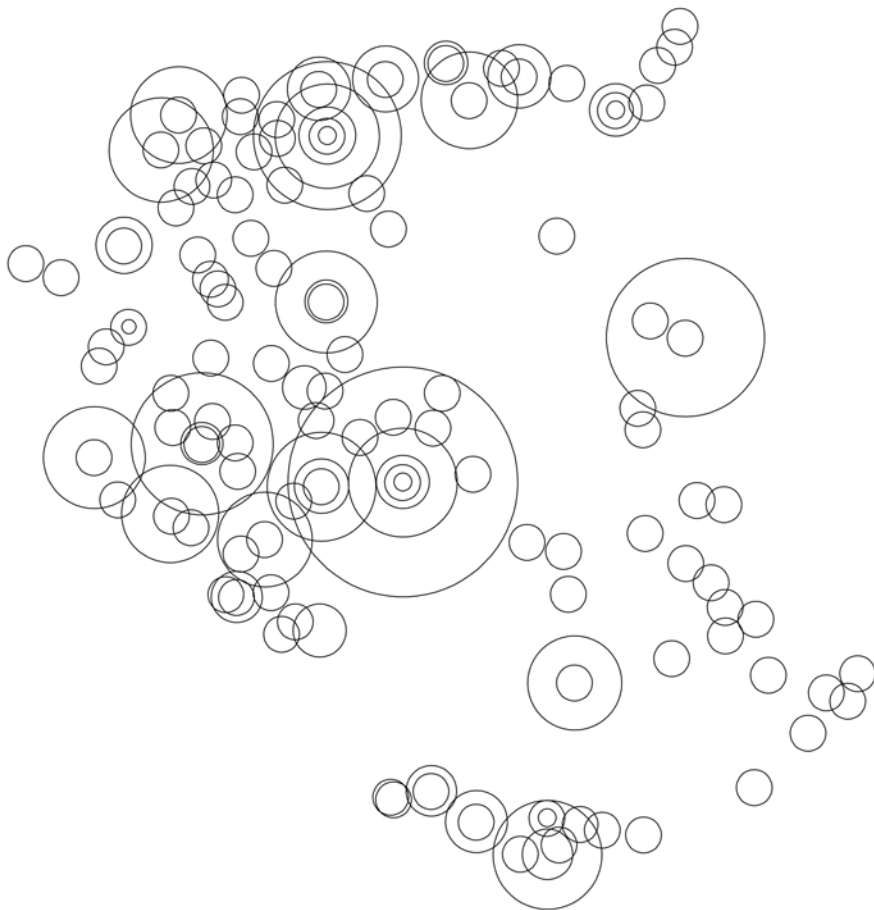

When information is mentioned it is at first in a technical sense (the signal that is trafficked in digital or other ways) and then the intellectual informative material that is conceived after the translation of the technical information (signals, waves, etc).

Networks that use wireless infrastructure for the informational distribution highlight the immaterial identity of this landscape. They use antennas to organize continuous fields of informational range. Human perception travels along with the information of this landscape and extends its natural and notional action.

This infoscape is related to the geographical landscape since it receives all its facts. Anything that happens is translated into a signal, into some kind of information and is distributed through networks.

This infoscape tends to be continuous. In the network era any geographical point is part of a global system. Any region gets into this system via its available infrastructure. The incorporated areas get isolated and become the periphery of the linked centres. The economicopolitical correlations of these two -scapes are part of a wider research. There are issues about the way they participate to the evolution of space.

The case of TV and radio signals.

An approachable part of these networks is the TV and radio transmitting systems. It is easy to experience their expansion just by checking a radio or tv reception at various geographical points of a country. TV and Radio stations can cover a certain geographical area according to laws and technical regulations. Their aim, however, is to be as expanded as possible as any other network infrastructure. After going through official data (national council of TV and radio) it seems that in Greece some regions are supposed to be under no TV or radio coverage if the stations follow their legal broadcasting eliminations. There are supposed to be void ares.

After in situ checks it has been realized that these void zones do not actually exist. Regions that should legally be in signal void are receiving full signals. This happens for a lot of reasons such as the illegal transmitting, the signal leakage etc.

Mediascape tends to be continuous, extended and homogeneous. There are difficulties in approaching it theoretically because of its constant presence. We can't stand away from it. Its limits cannot be defined.

The mechanism of void creation ■ products.

The aim is to define a mechanism that can preserve and create void. A mechanism that confronts and explores the limits of networks; that can preserve the existence of their absence and our possibility to act on them.

A mechanism that interferes into TV and radio networks is proposed. A structure that uses networks' media in an alternative way that could allow their retraction. The trick is the intervention in the frequencies by broadcasting ■void■ via conventional TV and radio transmitters. It is a methodology that works exactly in the same way as channels and stations broadcast.

The materials are: an FM radio transmitter, UHF - VHF TV transmitter, a portable radio-TV set and an aluminum box. The objects are assembled in the box. The product is a portable device composed by ready made objects. This kit can be connected to external antennas for wider transmitting. It is able to intervene to preselected TV and radio frequencies creating void.

In this context the appliances and the media of the broadcasting system (tv-radio set, transmitters, aerials) are formed in a new sense.

The mechanism was set in order three times during three void production performances which were documented.

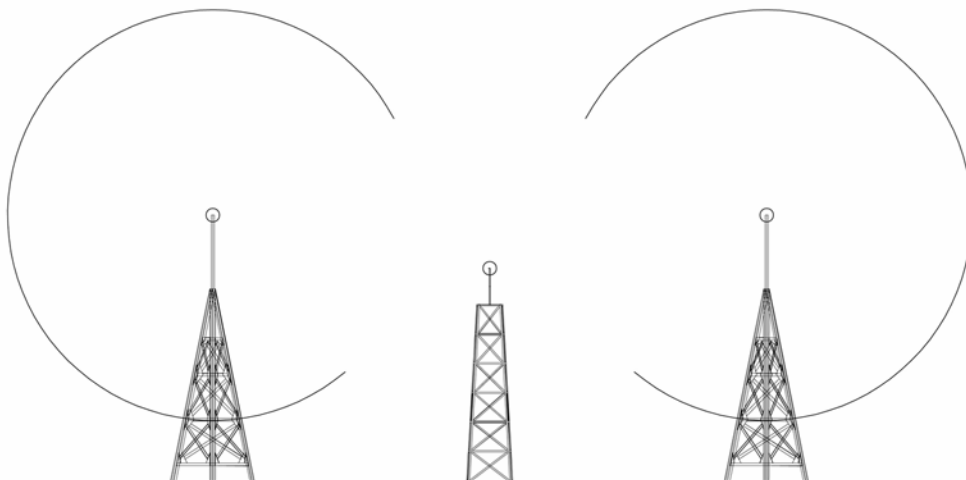

The first one took place in Farkadona, Trikala, Greece in June 2006 in terms of the PPC_T project (www.ppct.com). The TV transmitter was tuned in the frequency of a local TV station and broadband occupying its frequency. The transmitter was placed on the top of the declined settlement of Farkadona connected to an external TV aerial in order to produce better signal. After checking all the TV sets inside a range of 150 m. the TV receivers were successfully receiving the black black image that the transmitter was beaming.

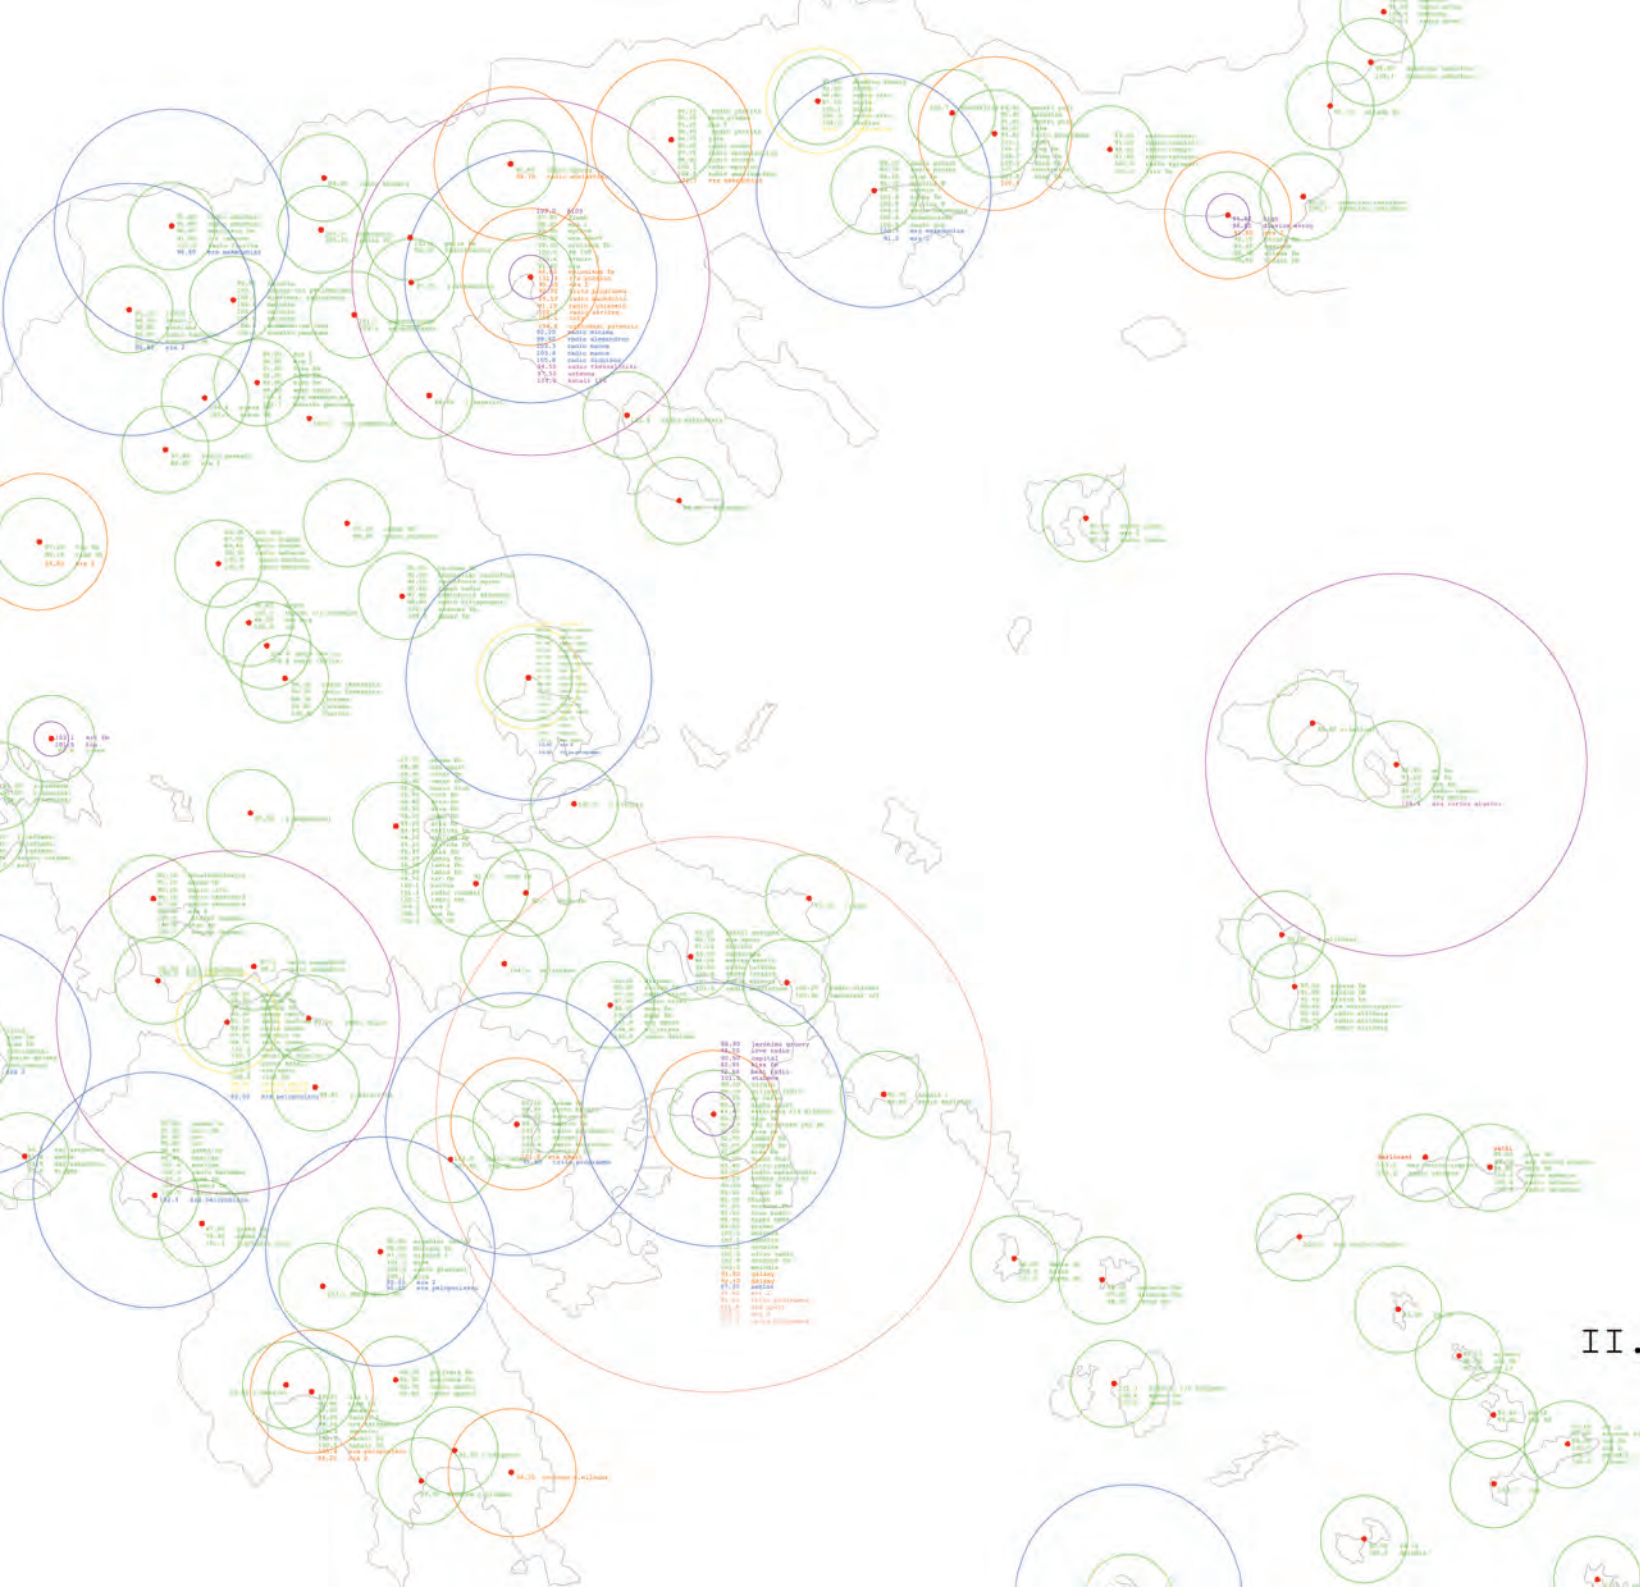

The second performance was held in August 2006 in Monastiraki area, Athens.

The mechanism was set in order at a square space occupying the frequency of the second national TV programme that uses the C5 frequency of UHF (NET)

The third performance was held in September 2006 in the same area of the centre of Athens. The void kit was set in order in the street affecting the radio station that uses the frequency 92.6 of FM (BEST FM). The coming-by vehicles had no radio reception within a distance of 20 m. from the transmitter.

The three immaterial, void spaces that were created from this procedure were traced on diagrams and drawings on the plans of the affected areas. These new invisible spaces are proposed as void zones in the radio and TV networks. They also propose a general approach that could be applied in other kinds of networks. In this way void spaces could be more extended.
